Health and Wellbeing

Crisis Support Worker

Before Lily started her health and wellbeing journey, she was a stay-at-home mum. But she always had the interest to study in the back of her mind. When Lily realised she was able to study the level four Certificate in Health and Wellbeing flexibly and part-time she jumped straight in, starting on a path where she could learn skills to help others in her community.

“When my youngest was five I decided to get back into work, but I still had study in the back of my mind.

I found out the Level 4 Health and Wellbeing programme was a pre-requisite for the Bachelor of Social Work, and I thought a part-time programme would be a good step back into study.”

With the encouragement of her aunty, Lily chose to study at Whitireia, where the support networks of her tutors and library staff were instrumental in helping her achieve her study goals.

“My aunty was the one that really sold it to me. She’d studied there and mentioned how good the support for students was. She said that there was a team in the library who could answer your questions and help you with assignments.

She was right, there was heaps of support and it really helped me through. Sometimes I can experience a bit of self-doubt, but my tutors really helped me overcome that.”

‘I tell all my friends and family that if they need a place to start, health and wellbeing is it. You can fit it into your life, and there’s tonnes of support.’

For Lily, the most important thing she learned while studying Health and Wellbeing was setting boundaries. She was then able to take what she learned to apply them in her current job, working as a crisis support worker.

“One of the most helpful things we learnt about was setting boundaries. I’m such an open person, I find it easy to go above and beyond what’s needed. When we spoke about it in class, almost everyone felt the same. Another subject I found really interesting was cultural responsiveness. We learnt about different customs and how that affects the way you approach different situations.”

By completing the New Zealand Certificate in Health and Wellbeing, Lily has been able to fulfil her goal, by being able to be out in the community, helping people.

“I tell all my friends and family that if they need a place to start, health and wellbeing is it. You can fit it into your life, and there’s tonnes of support.”

'WelTec gave me the help and support I needed to change my career.'

Gareth

Health and Wellbeing

Mental Health Support Worker

At the age of 55, Gareth decided to change careers. He was managing Koru lounges for Air New Zealand when COVID-19 hit, the effects of which meant Gareth found himself out of a job.

Gareth decided to turn his redundancy into an opportunity for change. He had always wanted to find a rewarding and fulfilling career path, and after exploring Whitireia and WelTec's programmes online, came across the Health and Wellbeing Support Work programme.

Taking the leap back into study was a little daunting for Gareth, who'd never enjoyed school. After some awful experiences, he left school at 15, and told himself he would never step foot into a classroom again.

However, his fears were squashed when he started at WelTec and met his tutors, who were encouraging, supportive and charismatic. They were always happy to answer his questions. "It was the best experience I've ever had in a learning environment."

After completing his studies, Gareth is now able to support people on their journeys. He helps people with intellectual disabilities to overcome challenges and sets them on a path to rediscover their purpose.

For Gareth's clients, tasks that seem simple to most can be a big challenge. It's important that as they re-learn basic tasks and processes, they get support in a non-judgemental environment. "I love seeing my clients grow and being part of their journey. I get to make a real difference to the lives of people who are disadvantaged in our society and have experienced a lot of hardship."

To anyone thinking of studying at WelTec, Gareth says, "Go for it - you'll feel like you're on a journey to something really positive and worthwhile."
